Homework 1

Reflecting on this project, GPT obviously can do more with whatever it runs on compared to my currently middling skills in javascript. But at the same time, I'm a little bit miffed about how easy it is to just put in the prompt "Pizza with pepperoni and bell peppers" into the search bar and see it "created" in less than a minute in comparison to the p5.js drawing that took me about an hour and some odd change to make. However, I'm not going to sit here and act like it's some cardinal sin to use AI, especially since the assignment this week is explicitly asking me to use it to make food pictures.

But doing this has me thinking (a rare occurrence, I know): At what point does generative AI stop being a tool and start being little more than a technological crutch. Beats me, I'm just jealous of the AI making something better than I can.
